Summary of Land at Portmore Estate

The land forming the whole of Portmore Estate can be analysed approximately as follows:

	Acres	Hectares
Arable and Temporary Grassland	218.83	88.56
Permanent Pasture	665.44	269.30
Rough Grazing	172.33	69.74

Woodland and Forestry	639.06	258.62
Misc.	176.00	71.23
TOTAL	3459.62	1400.09

Sport

Portmore Estate previously ran a very successful, highly regarded low ground pheasant shoot which has very recently been wound up. It could however be readily re-established with a number of strategically placed release pens still in place, practical sheds being at Hillhead and with the topography of the Estate, some very good and at times challenging drives.

Further information is available upon request from the Selling Agents.

Forestry and Woodland

There are 639 acres (258 hectares) of diverse woodlands surrounding Portmore House and to the north of the estate, which have been sympathetically managed for sustainable commercial timber production, amenity and sporting purposes. The woodlands comprise an interesting and diverse mixture of habitats including productive conifer woodlands, traditional mixed conifer and broadleaf woodland. Much of the woodland surrounding Portmore House and to the north of the estate is contained within the designed landscape and respectfully blends this designation with a well-managed commercial timber crop. There is a Long-Term Forest Plan in place which details forestry management until approximately 2040.

Surrounding Portmore House and Gardens (Lot 1) the woodlands are a varied mixture of native mixed broadleaves, beech and conifer, forming attractive policies which form the designed landscape. These woodlands provide an inviting principal entrance to Portmore House.

The policy woodlands have generally been retained for their amenity character and date from the early 1900s and are partly designated as part of the long establishment plantation origin in the Ancient Woodland Inventory. Thinning and management has been identified in the Long-Term Forest Plan to enhance their character. This area of woodland has provided the canvas for the estate's driven pheasant shoot and roe stalking opportunities.

The area to the north and east of the Estate, including Portmore Loch (Lot 2) encompasses the majority of the commercial woodland.

Felling and replanting has been undertaken most recently in 2019 and thinning of compartments with the focus on restructuring woodland over time. A proportion of the conifer areas have been identified for felling and replanting in the next 10 years due to their age and maturity. The plan details increasing the area of Sitka Spruce in less sensitive areas and maintaining the productivity of high-quality timber.

Within Lot 2, the woodlands are formed into shelter belts of variable ages, ranging from 1900 to recent planting in 2019. There is a diversity of species through the landscape with mixed broadleaves and conifer being the predominate class, which provide shelter to the estate's livestock farming enterprise. Further details of the estate's forestry and woodland enterprises are contained within the data room.

Forestry and Woodland Creation Potential

There are significant areas of land comprising grassland and moorland with potential for woodland creation with this land rising from just over 200m to some 620m. This is graded by the James Hutton Institute as Grade 4 to Grade 6 and with soils dominated by brown earths and podzols. The Forest Research Ecological Site Classification (ESC) models show the land as capable of supporting a wide range of woodland types and species from productive conifer to native broadleaf woodland. Over 750 hectares of this land falls below 400m in elevation, with the higher land generally having an easterly aspect avoiding exposure to prevailing westerly winds. Statutory designations are limited to a Scheduled Monument surrounded by existing woodland although a number of historic features, (generally cairns, old farmsteads and turf banks) typical of the borders landscape, are noted on Canmore. The northern part of the estate is included in the Historic Environment Scotland inventory of Garden and Designed Landscape which is likely to restrict new woodland creation within this area to that which is sympathetic to the existing landscape. Greater opportunities for more extensive productive forestry, or larger scale woodland with a focus on carbon sequestration, lie across the southern and eastern parts of the estate. No detailed site investigations have been undertaken and any woodland creation will be subject to appropriate site surveys, consultation and Scottish Forestry approval.
